“ I have very fond memories of Mrs Bush when I visited her home as a teenager. I remember her as a very classy, intelligent woman who was always very concerned about supporting her children and friends and directing them towards a positive role in life. It is clear she exemplified that sentiment. I remember one day when she told me of a story of the most unsuspecting classmate who became a physician after a very mediocre performance in high school. I took that story to heart and I became a physician and still practice medicine since 1999. I like to think that Mrs Bush played a very significant part in molding me in the few moments that I had with her.
