“ I'll never forget the time I was playing by a high-rise senior citizen building like all kids do I was swinging like monkey on something not for kids to play and I ended up dropping on my knees instead of my feet and badly bloodied my right knee. red took me over his shoulder and took me to the hospital because my father wasn't home either in the service or working for the city. He got me there as fast as he could, and I stayed at his daughter's house that night for a birthday party. after all those year I ran into his daughter 6 years ago at green hills but had no clue that Red had passed. The fact I still can walk on that leg I should give credit to Red, and I sincerely hope his family has dealt with their loss calmly and show the same strength he showed me at a point in my life where I was weak.

“ Red no longer suffers and experiences the terror of dying. Smile for him and the sense of peace he now has. It is us, that are living, that experience the pain of his death. As u were once my family, my sympathy is with all of u.
